Company to use global 'hub and spoke' work model as a competitive advantage

HOBOKEN, N.J., Aug. 3, 2023 /PRNewswire/ -- Hain Celestial Group (Nasdaq: HAIN), a leading manufacturer of better-for-you brands that inspire healthier living, announced today the location of its new headquarters and flexible work model to deliver greater value as a globally integrated enterprise.

After a thorough vetting process, Hain has selected Hoboken, N.J. to serve as the hub of its global operations. With Hoboken as the hub, Hain offices and manufacturing locations in the U.S., Canada, Europe, and other international locations will serve as the "spokes" for team members to come together and collaborate for moments that matter.

"Hain's hub and spoke work model enables broader team collaboration and greater connectivity as a global enterprise," said Hain Celestial Group Chief Executive Officer Wendy Davidson. "It also provides us the ability to recruit the very best talent, regardless of where they are located."

Hoboken will also serve as the home of Hain's Innovation Experience Center, where team members, customers, and consumers will immerse themselves in Hain's products, explore consumer insights, and create innovative opportunities for the future. The company will continue to leverage R&D labs at its manufacturing facilities for more comprehensive product development and scale.

"Our headquarters decision is among the early actions we are taking to support our multiyear transformation strategy called "Hain Reimagined," which we will unveil at our Investor Day on September 13," added Davidson.

The building and its location were carefully selected to ensure they align with the company's purpose to inspire healthier living.
