

Don't "Deflate" Your Tailgate With GMO Ingredients In Your Snacks This Sunday

January 28, 2015

LAKE SUCCESS, N.Y., Jan. 28, 2015 /PRNewswire/ -- Fans looking for non-GMO ingredients can turn to a trusted source for snacks this Sunday with brands from The Hain Celestial Group, Inc. (NASDAQ: HAIN), a leading organic and natural products company. Hain Celestial's deep bench of natural, organic and non-GMO snacks, including Garden of Eatin'®, Sensible Portions®, TERRA®, Bearitos® and Rudi's Organic Bakery® will be sure to win over fans at every Big Game Party.

Americans consume an estimated 11.2 million pounds of potato chips and 8.2 million pounds of tortilla chips during The Big Game, and party planners are looking for wholesome options to satisfy their guests. While Hain Celestial brands may not be the traditional Big Game players, their message is just as important.

"Even during one of the biggest snacking events of the year, people are becoming increasingly conscious of the type of food they put into their bodies. Consumers across the country, from New England to Seattle, will take pride in serving our organic and non-GMO snacks during The Big Game," said Jared Simon, Senior Director of Marketing, Hain Celestial Snacks and Bakery.

The Hain Celestial Group offers many wholesome snacking alternatives that are sure to lead to a touchdown of taste and flavor during The Big Game:
